Constitutions Around the World

A - CANADA

Canada is a constitutional monarchy. The Constitution of Canada is not one document, but a lot of different ones. It is a combination of the written acts and unwritten agreements. Modern Canada was born in 1867 when British colonies formed a confederation under British rule, the British North America Act. It was a British law, so only the British parliament could change it. In the 1980s, the Canadian government turned the BNA Act into a Canadian law. Now it could only be changed by the government of Canada. In 1982 the Constitution Act took away Britain's law-making powers over Canada.

B - ANGOLA

Portugal granted independence to its former colony in 1975. The constitution of 1975 created a one-party state headed by a president. He was also chairman of his party. The country's new constitution was published in 2010. It terminated the post of prime minister, added the position of vice president, and made the role of the president more powerful. It also removed the direct election of the president. Now the leader of the party with the largest share of the vote in the elections is the president. The president is limited to two five-year terms. Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly. Its members are elected to four-year terms.

C - TURKEY

The constitution was approved by national referendum in 1982. The main legislative body is the Grand National Assembly. It is elected for a five-year term. Members are chosen by proportional representation based on political parties. There are some rules: extremist parties are not allowed, and parties that get less than 10 percent of the national vote cannot be represented in the parliament. Executive power was first shared between the prime minister as head of government and the president as head of state, but a referendum in 2017 cancelled the office of prime minister and increased the role of president.

D - ISRAEL

Israel has no written constitution. They have tried to draft the formal document since 1948. Since then, Israel has created a system of basic laws and rights, which have semi-constitutional status. A special Committee of the Israeli National Assembly, the Knesset, started the Constitution by Broad Consensus Project, which aims to write a constitution for the State of Israel. The Committee has been meeting weekly since May 2003. The proposed constitution will be brought to the Knesset and the people for revision and ratification.

E - NEW ZEALAND

New Zealand's constitution is not found in one document. Instead, it has a number of sources, for example, important pieces of legislation, legal documents, common law and formal agreements. New Zealand's uncodified constitution is based on the Treaty of Waitangi. It is a founding document of government in New Zealand. The Constitution Act 1986 is a key formal statement of New Zealand's system of government. The Act recognises the Queen as the Head of State of New Zealand and the Governor-General as her representative. Some British laws have been included into New Zealand law.

 Please write your answers on the Answer Sheet.

Pakistani legislator kicked out of assembly

On April 29, staff and fellow members of the assembly criticised Mahjabeen Sheran for bringing her seven-month-old son, who was sick and could not be left at home, to the chamber for a session.

Sheran is a legislator from Balochistan's Kech district and became a member of the assembly in 2018 on a reserved seat for women. She said it was the "worst" situation for her when she had to choose between taking care of her son and attending work.

"I felt embarrassed because some men in the session were making jokes about me bringing my son. At that point, I looked for someone to stand up for me and support me, but no one did," she said.

Several times in the past, Sheran had requested the assembly's secretary for a spare room to turn it into a kindergarten facility. He said no again and again. The legislator is now looking for support from political leaders and activists to create kindergarten facilities in government offices and assemblies. She said she would also propose a bill to allow mothers to bring babies to the assemblies and "to share the experiences of working mothers with men".

A kindergarten centre was opened in Parliament House in Pakistan's capital city Islamabad two years ago.

"How can a country succeed when the most important part of the society (women) are treated this way? Such cases hold back women of this country from succeeding and being independent," said Mumtaz Mughal, the regional director of Aurat Foundation, a non-profit organisation that works on women's rights and gender equality.

"The fact that Mahjabeen Sheran had to leave the session tells us about the patriarchal thinking in our society and we have a lot of work to do in order to change that."

Sheran said she had seen women lawyers, activists and politicians who took their children to work if they had to. She said she was disappointed that bringing children to the assembly in Pakistan was against the law.

In a similar case, members of the Kumamoto City Assembly criticised a Japanese politician, Yuka Ogata, because she brought her baby to a council session. She said that she wanted to show the difficulties when women have careers and raise children at the same time. In 2018, New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern made history when she attended the United Nations General Assembly together with her newly-born baby.

Back in Pakistan, Sheran's case went viral on social media, and received support from people from across the country.

"People from all over the country were contacting me to express their support for me and my campaign," she said. "We must respect those women who work and also take care of their household. It is not easy and we face challenges on a daily basis."
